Purchasing managers are responsible for many moving parts, especially during the planning and formulating stages.

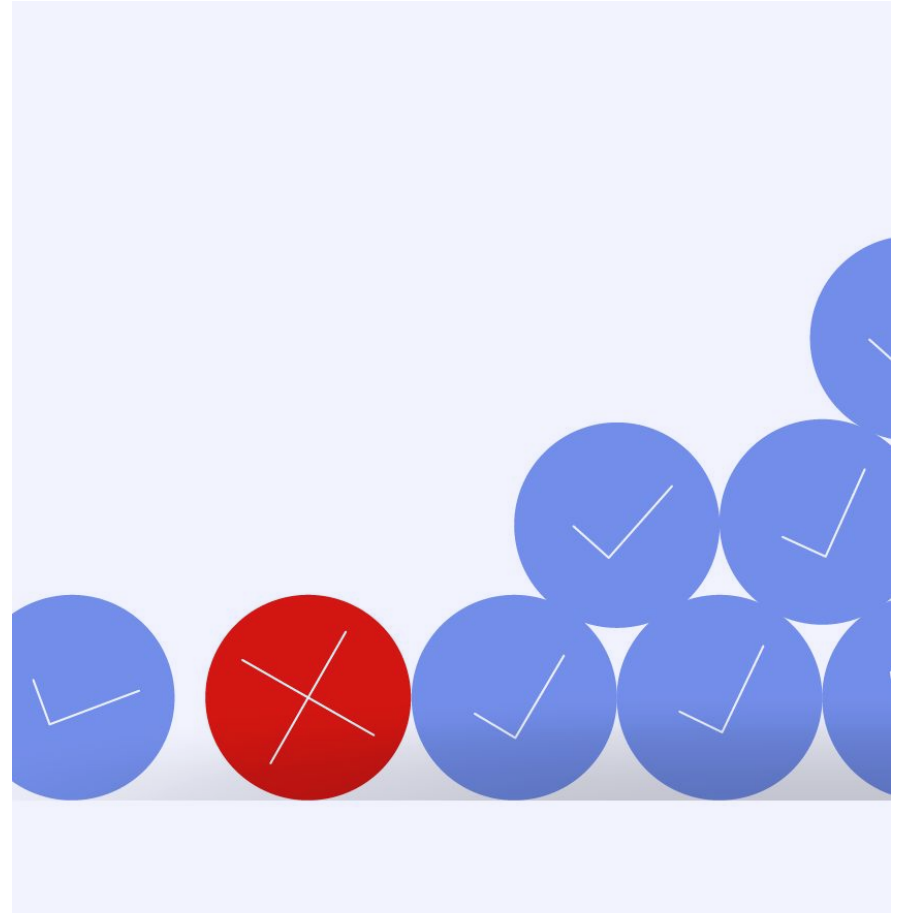

Many managers typically rely on data management tools such as Microsoft Excel or Google Sheets - sometimes even their own memory, to effectively manage offers and carry out tasks.

However, these methods often lead to frustration and inefficiency, primarily because of the time and effort required to consistently manage this information.

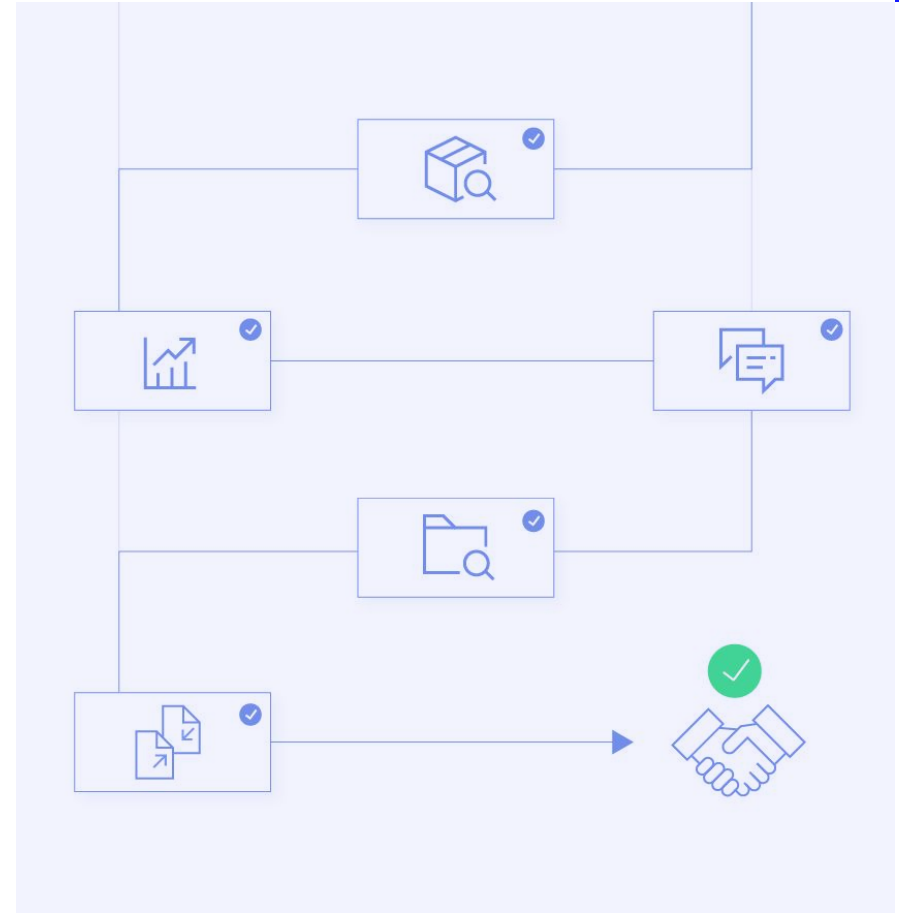

Furthermore, relying solely on memory to handle job responsibilities also poses a considerable risk of critical errors and accidents.

But your business hurdles can become stepping stones with Trade Navigator.

The robust nature of Trade Navigator guarantees a high stability of your data, empowering you to effectively manage deals, make data-driven decisions, and gain clear visibility into your operations.

Allocation

→ You can allocate multiple suitable Purchase Quotations to a single Demand, providing the flexibility to carefully weigh your options before proceeding with your deals

→ With this functionality, you can thoroughly review your selections, ensuring confidence in your decisions right up to the moment of finalization

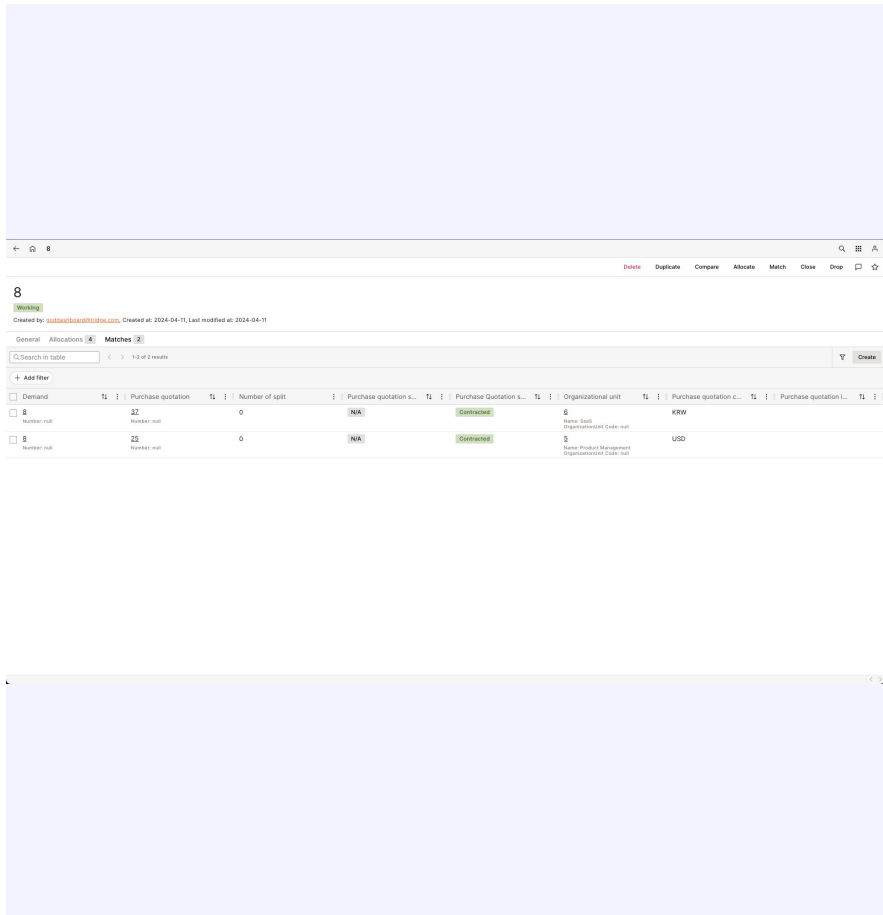

The screenshot displays the 'Allocation' tab in the Trade Navigator interface. It shows a table with 4 rows of allocation data. The table has columns for Demand, Purchase quotation, Number of split, Purchase quotation s..., Organizational unit, and Purchase quotation c... The status of each allocation is indicated by a green box with the word 'Contracted' or 'Working'.

Demand	Purchase quotation	Number of split	Purchase quotation s...	Organizational unit	Purchase quotation c...

Split

- Trade Navigator gives you the flexibility of splitting a single Purchase Quotation into multiple allocations, catering to the nuanced requirements of several Demands
- This capability recognizes that a single offer may not always perfectly align with every aspect of a purchasing plan
- This feature is helpful when managing scenarios such as distributing a sizable offer across multiple smaller Demands or when centralizing procurement efforts from headquarters to subsidiaries
